Segment A — NEPQ Rewrite

Three-email sequence for parishes and shrines named for Our Lady of Guadalupe, rewritten in the NEPQ style (Jeremy Miner / Black Book of Questions).

Original pitch-driven version stays at segment-a-guadalupe-parishes.md for A/B testing or a fallback.

What's different from the original

Traditional (current)	NEPQ version (this file)
Statements about the product	Questions about the prospect's situation
"We offer..." opens the email	A curious question opens the email
Product features named up-front	Product barely mentioned — reader asks about it
CTA is "Order for Your Parish →"	CTA is "worth a quick reply?"
Pitch drives the email	Prospect's answer drives the email
~350 words each	~180 words each — shorter, tighter

NEPQ moves the seller from "here's why we're worth it" to "here's what I'm curious about — how do you think about this?" The email invites a reply, not a click. Replies are the currency.

Cadence and personalization — unchanged

Same 10-day cadence, same Gmail multi-send merge fields (`@firstname` , `@parishname` , `@city` , `@state` , `@contactrole` , `@guadalupeconnection`). Same UTM tag on outbound links: `utm_campaign=parish-outreach-`

2026&utm_content=a-nepq-<n> .

Email 1 — Curiosity opener (Day 0)

Subject: A question about the shrine at @parishname

Preview text: Not a pitch — curious about how parishes think through the image at the center of a Guadalupe shrine.

Body:

Dear @firstname,

Quick question — the shrine at @parishname has been through what I imagine is decades of parishioners walking in, lighting candles, praying novenas.

When it comes time to refresh or replace the image at the center of a shrine like that, how do parishes usually think it through? I'm asking a handful of Guadalupe-dedicated parishes because the answers so far have been more varied than I expected — some inherit whatever the founder chose, some had a family donate the current one, some just haven't touched it in fifty years.

Would love to hear the story at @city if you have a minute to reply.

If it's more useful to see what we do first, the parishes page has the direct answer.

Thanks, Peace Bill

Email 2 — Insight + problem awareness (Day 4)

Subject: Why Guadalupe prints look so different from each other

Preview text: A pattern from talking with parishes about the shrine image — most people haven't noticed it until it's pointed out.

Body:

Dear @firstname,

A pattern from those parish conversations:

Most Guadalupe prints on the market are photographs of photographs of photographs. Each generation loses detail. That's why the face, the gold edging, and the stars on the mantle vary so much between sellers. Not fraud — just print-of-print degradation over the years.

Have you noticed that when you compare Guadalupe prints from different sources? Some of the color in the mantle and the detail in the face just isn't there anymore.

Curious how @parishname currently thinks about that when choosing an image — is fidelity to the original something that comes up in the conversation, or does the visual just have to feel right for the space?

If a short read on how our print traces back to a specific 1998 Mexican certification would be useful for your Guadalupe ministry: What we can prove →

Email 3 — Consequence + soft close (Day 10)

Subject: A timing question about December 12

Preview text: The Jubilee is open, the feast is a Friday this year, and the calendar math has an inflection point most parishes miss.

Body:

Dear @firstname,

The Guadalupe Jubilee is open (Oct 12, 2026 through Oct 12, 2027), and the feast day this year falls on a Friday.

Quick calendar question — if @parishname wanted the shrine image refreshed in time for the feast, what would the internal path look like? Council approval, budget sign-off, ordering, receiving, local framing, hanging. Four to six weeks isn't unusual, from what I've seen.

Reason I ask: if that's the timing, your last practical order date for a Dec 12 arrival lands around the second week of November. After that we can still ship — shipping just starts competing with the parish's local frame-shop turnaround.

Would it be a bad idea to see a canvas in person before you decide? Happy to send a smaller size (12"×18" thin gallery wrap, $57) if it would help the discernment. Reply and let me know.

Or if you already know what you want, the order page for parishes has the direct path.

Thanks, Peace Bill

Notes on the NEPQ voice

Words that stay in. Curious. A pattern I've noticed. What would that look like? Would it be a bad idea? Worth a quick reply? These are NEPQ's connective tissue — they signal the seller isn't defending anything, and they invite the prospect to think out loud.

Words that stay out. We offer. Our product. Church-authorized. The only. Ready to hang. Free shipping. These are declarative claims. NEPQ's whole point is that when the prospect sells themselves on the need, features stop mattering. Features re-enter only when the prospect asks.

Escape hatches. Every email ends with two exits — reply, or click. NEPQ prefers reply. The click is there for people who are ready to buy without a conversation, so we don't lose the transaction while waiting for a reply we might not get.

Reply expectation. Segment A is 20 parishes. Historical NEPQ reply rates on cold B2B email are 8–15% when the technique is applied well. That's 2–3 real conversations from this send, which is the point — you don't want 20 fast noes, you want 3 good ones.

Length. Each email is ~180 words versus ~350 in the original. NEPQ reads shorter because it's not defending a claim, it's asking a question. A long NEPQ email starts sounding like a survey.
